

Philip K. Dick

Philip K. Dick was quickly recognized for some of his earlier works, such as The Man In The High Tower, which was awarded the Hugo Award for Best Novel. He also wrote Flow My Tears, the Policeman Said which was the winner of the John W. Campbell Memorial Award for best novel.

“Philip manages to paint a bleak and incredibly realistic picture of a future Earth, while still having believable characters.”

- The Guardian

After a devastating nuclear world war, earth is left in a terrible state. Most animal species have gone extinct due to the radiation poisoning, leading them to be replaced with android versions of themselves. Naturally, human androids were also mass produced for a time.

Rick Deckard is a bounty hunter who is hired on a mission, to hunt down and ‘retire’ six different human androids who have gone rogue. However, things get complicated when these robots are almost indistinguishable from ordinary humans, all the way down to their personalities.

At what point
does an emulated consciousness become the same as human consciousness?
